Teaching the Legislative Process with Primary Sources Using Congress.gov

April 14, 2020 by Danna Bell

This post is by Jen Reidel, the 2019-2020 Library of Congress Civics Teacher in Residence.

As a Civics teacher, I know the value of understanding the legislative process, but when I facilitate a bill-making simulation in my Civics and Law classes, I notice that students often find the process of how a bill becomes a law removed from, and irrelevant to, their lives.

One tool to make the process more engaging is to use the Library of Congress' official site for federal legislative information. Congress.gov. The website offers a variety of information to support student learning. The Legislative
